

A new service for individuals affected by family and sexual abuse is now available in Calgary.

Connect Family and Sexual Abuse Network (formerly Calgary Collaborative Services Centre) is a partnership between Calgary and area service providers who are working together to simplify access to essential services for individuals and families affected by family and sexual abuse.

One phone call will connect you or your clients with an experienced representative who can determine your immediate needs and provide you with discreet, effective and confidential assistance – and connect you directly with our partnered service providers who will best serve you.

Connect partners with health-care, law enforcement and crisis services ensuring that whatever your needs, Connect or their partners will be able to answer your questions and offer effective assistance.

We are located at the Sheldon M. Chumir Health Centre. Call now for support or to make an appointment.

“After I called the police, I spoke to a social worker at the hospital and again at the shelter. Each time you retell your story, you feel as though you are reliving the pain. If all the services were combined the process would be a better experience.”
