The Program

Helping people with diverse abilities thrive in their communities.

WJS Canada works to improve the lives of persons with developmental disabilities by encouraging them to be self directed and to make their own decisions. In order to build social, communication skills and life skills our team members offer support to encourage and enable independence, self expression and creativity in the persons we serve. Behavioral and health-related support is tailored to their individual needs.

The Position

Our dedicated and caring staff work a variety of shifts within residential homes, day programs and accompanying the persons served throughout the community. As a Disability Support Worker they provide high quality, personalized care, helping those we serve to overcome their challenges and develop their strengths. We ensure a full life by forging friendships, nurturing a sense of belonging and encouraging community inclusion.

We encourage every individual we serve to participate in the development of their care plan, and we also invite family members and loved ones to become involved. This way we can be sure the individual's unique strengths, personal goals and activity preferences are taken into account.
